

Real Energy Solutions for Real Americans

Crisis Management by J.J. Johnson 05.18.01

This was supposed to be a balanced news analysis about Bush's energy proposals given on May 17, 2001. Even though I don't necessarily agree with all of them, recent actions of the left wing, communist leaning, and so-called 'environmental/animal rights lobby' forced a change in direction to this essay. Ladies and Gentleman of Real America - lock and load.

Although outright violent actions is never condoned at Sierra Times, it has become evident that these green thugs just won't stop until Real American wages outright war against them.

So let's give 'em a good one. It's time, America.

Okay, now some of you out there (notably out west) will cringe at this action since the unspoken rule was to be non-violent when speaking out against environmental policies. The rule (as they tell me) is that violence never solves anything. Strangely enough, it seems to work too often for the other side. Even though 'they' can damage ski resorts, spike trees, dump oil and coal in front of the official residence of the vice-president, burn Subs, housing developments, etc., their reward is to get even more of their outrageous demands each day.

Several tons of coal and a handful of oil barrels blocked an entrance to Cheney's residence on the grounds of the Naval Observatory in northwest Washington and activists carried banners with slogans such as ``Bush/Cheney Energy Scam."

Police observed the truck dumping the coal and took down the names of those involved. There were no arrests. Go figure.

Not mad enough, yet? Would having sanctioned commentary on National Public Radio (NPR) condoning the actions of eco-terrorists raise an eyebrow?

It was done by Mary Sojourner of KUNA radio in Flagstaff. You can read her garbage on the net at: <http://www.knau.org/Pages/new2.5.html>

Her words: "When I read about torched houses I want to send money for matches...Vengeance is a moral response."

And no, no one at KUNA bothered to disavow these statements.

So, since "vengeance is a moral response", how about when its decided that sucker fish are so important that 1500 farms go dry, and people suffer? How about when cattle are stolen and/or left to die because of wild horses that a federal agency even admits they can't control? How about prohibiting loggers from removing FALLEN TREES from forests, turning whole states into tinder boxes?

Or for you folks in California, how about having so many environmental regulations that you will be forced to find shade in the desert this summer? Think about it. This will be a LIFE-THREATENING matter to many folks in the southwest. California should have ridded themselves of these pests long ago. Perhaps this summer, they'll be more motivated.

With George Bush signing an executive order to forge ahead with most of his new energy policies, the radical left has sent a clear signal of how they will respond - violence. It's only a matter of time before the next Ted Kaczynski rises to the surface.

In the past year, Westerners have demonstrated their frustration in at least three well-publicized acts of civil disobedience. (Jarbridge, NV, Klamath Falls, OR, and Eureka MT). More are planned. Yet few people fail to realize that when such a pattern of abuses are not addressed, such patterns of 'civil disobedience' has always led to an escalating conflict (re: The American Revolution). America should be made aware that the opposition to this "civil disobedience" in the west already considers "criminal activity" as a "moral response". Hence, in my opinion, it's only a matter of time before this anarchy is met with an equal and opposite reaction.

With all due respect to our Western brethren, we have been more than patient with the policies that have been laid against us. As demonstrated in the last election, we turned out in droves to place a man in office that vowed to address these concerns. Today, they now have a taste (via the Vice President's doorstep) what Rural America has suffered under for years. And today, our national security is threatened due to these types vowing to hold our energy policy hostage.

We have begged and pleaded peacefully for a redress of grievances, only to receive repeated injury. Sound familiar?

Although we have no authority to order the first shot be fired back at this domestic enemy among us, if and when the first rancher, miner, logger, farmer, or just plain Real American decides to remove one or several of these oxygen thieves from the planet, there would be no problem or hesitation justifying his actions. Few dare say these things openly so as not to be labeled unfairly. Unfortunately, this passive behavior is what gives the opposition its strength and motivation. Turning the table against them could turn the tide against these policies.

Oh, am I being extreme? Tell it to a farmer who's family is starving because it's more important that a fish (normally used as bait) needs water than humans. Tell it to a person who worked hard all their life to pay for their home, only to see a red horizon coming toward them because fallen trees were never removed, and there's no road to even fight the oncoming blaze. Go ahead. Tell these people to "call their congressman, and don't forget to vote".

I can just see that Western say, "that guy's crazy - that's not what we want!" Right. No one wants war. Most folks never plan on war. The only reason full-scale war hasn't commenced is because too many Real American haven't realized that it has already begun - as far as the other side is concerned. So, to that Western rancher, logger, miner, etc: Don't bother saying it publicly - I just said it for you.

The battles should commence by random acts of civil disobedience everywhere. Make them come to you. Upon arrest, make sure enough noise is made that everyone hears about it. Let them call themselves environmentalists or animal rights activists. The moment any of them advocate the loss of private property rights, they become thieves in my opinion. Criminals. The Enemy. Upon their illegal or immoral actions, they should be dealt with as such. Let only God Almighty be merciful to them. "Negotiating" with criminal organizations such as "Greenpeace" and the "Sierra Club", is the equivalent of surrender.

It's time to make their offices worry about what type of actions may occur outside. It's time to make them 'feel our pain'. They should be cataloged, named, outed, and if the violence against us continues..

.well, you fill in the blank.
